USAID Advancing Nutrition Kenya

A Global Project

USAID Advancing Nutrition is USAID's flagship multi-sectoral nutrition project seeking to improve the nutritional status and health of populations vulnerable to nutritional deficiencies around the globe. This five-year project began in October 2018 and draws on expertise that spans sectors and contexts. Collaborating with stakeholders, JSI Research and Training Institute, Inc. and a diverse group of partners strengthen nutrition outcomes in a variety of development and humanitarian response settings. We do so by supporting country-led scale-up of effective, integrated, and sustainable nutrition programs and food and health systems. The project strengthens USAID's global nutrition investments by providing assistance to USAID Missions and in-country partners working at local, regional, and national levels to improve nutritional status and health outcomes where the burden of malnutrition is highest. We focus on the individuals most at risk of malnutrition, especially young children, their caregivers, and women of reproductive age.

Our Work in Kenya

In August 2020, USAID Advancing Nutrition in Kenya began to implement a two-year, multi-sectoral nutrition activity with the Government of Kenya and other stakeholders. This activity will strengthen national- and county-level government capacity to plan, finance, manage, and implement multi-sectoral nutrition interventions to improve the health of populations at risk of nutritional deficiencies. We use multi-sectoral collaboration to strengthen existing mechanisms of support for nutrition outcomes. This includes engaging with the Council of Governors and the Intergovernmental Forums; ensuring that County Nutrition Action Plans are operational, including sustainably budgeting and financing for nutrition;
